THE HEART OF AGRICULTURE

FARMING'S NEW DAWN

- New Agriculture Bill unveiled
- Lengthy transition planned

By Abi Kay

ENGLISH farmers are to be given seven years to adapt to a number of radical post-Brexit policies outlined in the Agriculture Bill.

The long-awaited legislation, which will bring about change on a scale unseen for almost 50 years, sets out a plan to create an 'agricultural transition' period from 2021-2027, although future Governments will have the option to extend it if necessary.

This lengthy transition has been granted to give farmers time to adjust to a different way of working, but the Government has been clear it is not intended to delay change, as direct payments will be phased out by the time it ends.

Replacing them will be an Environmental Land Management Scheme which pays farmers for providing public goods, such as water quality and flood mitigation.

The legislation also gives farmers a unique opportunity to take several years' worth of farm payments in a lump sum, even if they are no longer working the land.

Future

Defra Secretary Michael Gove said: "The introduction of the Agriculture Bill is an historic moment, as we leave the EU and move towards a brighter future for farming. This Bill will allow us to reward farmers who protect our environment."

However, Mr Gove admitted to industry leaders a different approach to future farming policy would be needed in the event of a 'no deal' Brexit.
